

Infrared Coronal Polarimetry: Magnetometry and More

J. Kuhn (1), S. Jaeggli (1), H. Lin (1), D. Mickey(1), J. Arnaud (2)

(1) institute for Astronomy, University of Hawaii, 2680 Woodlawn Dr. Honolulu HI
[kuhn@ifh.hawaii.edu], (2) Observatoire Midi-Pyrenees

Near-infrared spectropolarimetry of the solar corona is a powerful tool for measuring the coronal magnetic field and even the local interstellar wind. Here we describe how sensitive imaging spectropolarimetric observations are being obtained from the worlds largest coronagraph – a reflecting off-axis telescope – from the summit of Haleakala Hawai'i.