

Airborne measurement of the regional carbon balance

F.Miglietta(1), B.Gioli(1)

(1) Ibimet-Cnr, Firenze, Italy

Several methodologies and approaches can be used to measure regional carbon balance on the basis of landscape-scale flux measurement made using airborne eddy covariance. This paper analyzes some of those approaches and methods with emphasis on procedures that integrate together airborne and surface information. Two examples are shown for the southern part of The Netherlands and for South-West France.