

Orographic triggering of a thunderstorm

H. Ólafsson (1) and P. Arason (2)

(1) University of Iceland, Icelandic Meteorological Office, and Institute of Meteorological Research, (2) Veðurstofa Íslands - Icelandic Meteorological Office, Reykjavík, Iceland, (haraldur@vedur.is, arason@vedur.is)

A wintertime thunderstorm that struck parts of W-Iceland is investigated. Unlike most high-latitude wintertime thunderstorms, this storm developed over land and the registered lightning are almost exclusively over land. Numerical and observational studies of the airflow indicate that the thunderstorm was triggered by orographic lifting, but conditions were exceptionally favourable for vertical propagation and amplification of mountain waves.