

In Situ Observation of a Type II Solar Radio Burst Source Region

Yu. V. Khotyaintsev (1), V. Krasnoselskikh (2), M. V. Khotyaintsev (3) and S. Mühlbachler (4)

(1) Swedish Institute of Space Physics, Uppsala, Sweden, (2) LPCE, CNRS, Orleans, France, (3) Department of Astronomy and Space Physics, Uppsala, Sweden, (4) Max-Planck-Institut für Sonnensystemforschung, Katlenburg-Lindau, Germany

We present near-Earth in situ observation of a type II radio burst source region associated with a CME-driven interplanetary shock. Intense radiation in a broad frequency range above the local electron plasma frequency is observed in close vicinity of the shock ramp. We suggest that the radiation is generated through the transition radiation mechanism by energetic electrons traversing the shock front.