

Detecting severe storms using MSG data

I. M. Lensky and S. Shiff

Department of Geography and Environment, Bar Ilan University, Ramat Gan 52900, Israel
(lensky@mail.biu.ac.il)

An objective method to detect events of severe storms is presented. We use data from the European geostationary satellite Meteosat Second Generation to retrieve cloud top parameters, cloud microphysical structure, and to extract a number of parameters that give indication on potential severe storms events. Few case studies over the Mediterranean Sea and Israel are presented together with meteorological radar data for validation.